Dive Master Course Overview

The PADI Dive Master course is a performance-based program, meaning that class duration depends on class size, logistics, and Dive Master candidate performance characteristics. The PADI Dive Master course is divided into three sections: knowledge development, water skills and stamina, and practical application. The three sections will build off of each other to make the next part the most productive as possible. The knowledge development is the foundation, teaching you from self-study and class time, what you need as a professional-level diver, and to help you continue onto other professional positions. Then, you will build off of that foundation in the water skills and stamina module. Here, you will show what you know and have learned through a series of home study, classroom sessions, evaluation by exams, and in-water demonstrations, such as diver rescue. The goal of this example is to refine your skills past the Rescue Diver level. You will also be developing to demonstration the 18 basic scuba skills (mask clear, bcd off/on, etc). The practical application puts the divers skills to work that are typical for a Dive Master to perform. The three required training exercises are followed by an internship with specific internship.
